SWARM COURSE DESCRIPTION

with special reference to learning outcomes

Course description:

Due to the escalation of conflicts of interest in the field of water, problems of protection against harmful effects of water, increasing demand to increase the efficiency of water management systems, increasing the dangers to man and his environment due to water pollution, water management is becoming more complex and complex their planning, design and management. Since in these conditions the traditional methods of water management planning have become inapplicable, the aim of studying this subject is to master the basic techniques and methods of integrated water resources management.

Learning outcomes: Knowledge: To enable students to independently apply theoretical and practical knowledge for the purpose of integrated water management planning. Skills: Enabling students for engineering jobs to conduct research, calculations, analysis and conclusions related to water management planning. Competencies: Solving engineering problems in the field of optimization of water management systems in accordance with other engineering professions.
